Heathrow to reopen after closure causes global flight turmoil

London, March 21

BRITAIN'S HEATHROW SAID flights would resume later on Friday after a fire knocked out its power supply and shut Europe's busiest airport for the day, stranding thousands of passengers and causing travel turmoil worldwide.

Heathrow said its teams had worked tirelessly to reopen the world's fifth-busiest airport after it was forced to close entirely after a huge fire engulfed a substation near the airport on Thursday night, with travellers told to stay away.

The airport had been due to handle 1,351 flights on Friday, flying up to 291,000 passengers, but planes were diverted to other airports in Britain and across Europe, while many long-haul flights returned to their point of departure.

"We're now safely able to restart flights, prioritising repatriation and relocation of aircraft," Heathrow said in a statement on X.

"We hope to run a full operation tomorrow and will provide further information shortly. We apologise for the inconvenience caused by this incident." The closure not only caused misery for travellers but provoked anger from airlines who questioned how such crucial infrastructure could fail. The industry is now facing the prospect of a financial hit costing tens of millions of pounds, and a likely fight over who should pay. "You would think they would have significant back-up power," a top executive from a European airline told Reuters.

Air India cancels flights to and from London

AIR INDIA ON Friday said its operations to and from the London Heathrow airport have been disrupted, with one flight returning to Mumbai, another diverting to Frankfurt and other flights remaining cancelled due to a temporary suspension of operations at the airport.

Virgin Atlantic and British Airways, the two other carriers besides Air India, that have direct connectivity between India and London Heathrow (LHR) also cancelled their flights on Friday. Travel plans of hundreds of passengers who were scheduled to fly to LHR, including from Indian cities, were disrupted.

Following a significant power outage, operations at London Heathrow (LHR) have been suspended till 23:59 hours (local time) on March 21. In a statement, Air India said its operations to and from LHR have been disrupted. "London Heathrow-bound AI129 from Mumbai is returning to Mumbai; AI161 from Delhi is diverting to Frankfurt. All our remaining flights to and from London Heathrow, including AI111 of this morning, have been cancelled for 21 March," the airline said.

Air India also said that its flights to London Gatwick remain unaffected. —PTI

Tesla fans buy stock at never-seen-before pace

ESHA DEY
March 21

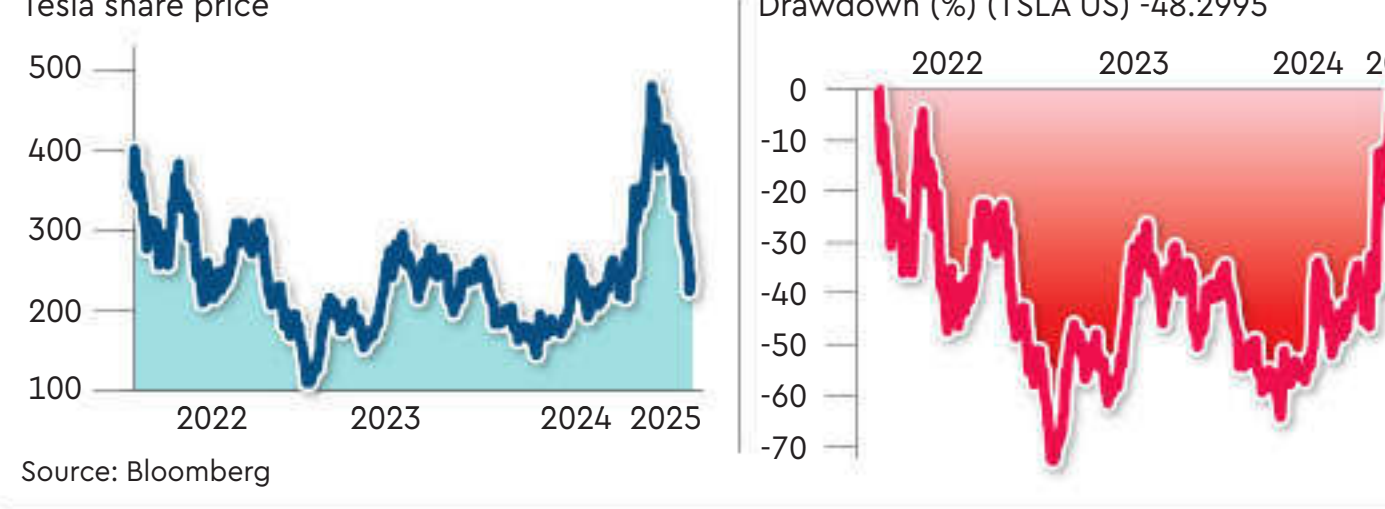

TESLA'S STOCK IS in a freefall. Its sales are plunging around the world. Even its most avid Wall Street bulls are turning cautious. But one group is buying the electric-vehicle maker's shares like never before: CEO Elon Musk's fans. The firm has long had an ardent fan base of individual investors who hang on to Musk's every word on X, the social-media platform he owns. They analyze Tesla in great detail in online forums and largely function as a hype crew for the stock.

But their current level of enthusiasm is staggeringly high, even by recent historical standards. Individual investors have been net buyers of Tesla shares for 13 straight sessions through Thursday, pumping $8 billion into the stock, retail trading data from JPMorgan Chase's global equity derivatives strategist Emma Wu shows. That's the biggest inflow over any buying streak since 2015, which is as far back as the data goes.

What makes the buying notable is Tesla's share price has sunk 17% over this time, wip-

SHARES DOWN HALFWAY FROM PEAK

Tesla tumbled amid worries about sales slowing, Musk's DOGE actions, economy ing out more than $155 billion from its market value.

"Tesla made some rookie to mid-stage public market investors extremely wealthy, a lot of people became millionaires because of this stock," said Nicholas Colas, co-founder at DataTrek Research. "People don't forget that. And they will come back to a stock again and again if they feel it has been beaten up."

Tesla shares have been on a steep slide since mid-December when it touched an all-time high fueled by optimism from Donald Trump's election victory. But that euphoria vanished, with the stock retreating more than 50% from its December 17 record, making it the second-biggest decliner in the S&P 500 Index this year. The rout has been so brutal that on Thursday, Musk sought to reassure Tesla employees during an all-hands meeting.

What's become clear is what Wall Street thought would be a boon for the company — Musk's prominent role in the Trump administration as the head of the Department of Government Efficiency — has instead become an albatross.

His growing political presence and involvement with controversies in Europe have triggered a backlash against the company and its leader, with the cars increasingly seen as political symbols. Protesters have thrown Molotov cocktails at Tesla showrooms and vandalized charging stations.

Sales of the Tesla's cars have sunk in key European markets, such as France and Germany, as well as in China and Australia. Global numbers won't be available until the company reports its first-quarter delivery figures early next month, but analysts across Wall Street have been aggressively cutting their estimates for sales and profits, citing the bleak data from around the globe.

On Thursday, Morgan Stanley analyst and longtime Tesla bull Adam Jonas lowered his price target on the stock and reduced his sales expectations for the company, citing growing competition, an aging vehicle lineup and a "buyers' strike from negative brand sentiment." However, he kept his buy-equivalent rating on the shares, saying the weak near-term expectations are "not particularly narrative changing" for a company whose future depends on robotics and AI.

Wedbush analyst Daniel Ives on Friday lauded Musk's efforts for "hand-holding" employees and investors at a key time, and said that if the CEO continued to lead on his vision, the stock will be on a growth path where 90% of its valuation will be led by autonomous-driving technology and robotics. This bullishness explains at least some of retail traders' continuing enthusiasm for the shares. —BLOOMBERG
